Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Safe Foundry Practice The foundry, viewing it from all angles, presents one of the greatest problems in the industrial world. The fact that the production of castings depends not only on a mechanical process, but also on a chemical process, makes it specially difficult to fasten upon any individual the responsibility for imperfect work. And yet there is a definite (even though unassignable) reason for the loss of every defective casting produced, - some one member of the department failed in properly performing his part of the work. Every man must therefore be taught to appreciate the importance of his own particular task, and must be impressed with the necessity of performing that task conscientiously, and as correctly and efficiently as he can. There should be a spirit of cooperation as earnest and sincere as that which prevails in a beehive, where every worker performs the task of the moment with singleness of purpose, and with no thought or motive other than the production of the best final result, from the united labors of all. The development of a point of view of this nature among the men will also have a profound effect in the way of reducing accidents, - a greater effect, in fact, than could be realized by any other single means. One of the problems that must receive special consideration in connection with accident-prevention work in foundries relates to the class of persons employed.
