Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: .the night, unless it was necessary to have night specials. She visited all of the patients and might have carried a disease from one room to another. If this was the case should we not also expect to have cross infections in the south end of the building as well as in the north end where all the crosses occurred? The same argument might be applied to the intern. It is quite reasonable for us to expect that those who are the most constantly in touch with the patients are the most likely to carry infection. These are the nurses and interns. The cross infections cannot be traced to the students because during their visits to the hospital several individuals are assigned to watch every movement they make. It is noteworthy that the students make few breaks in technic. It is also not impossible that the...
